Research Consultant

Kruttika Nadig joined Lord Cultural Resources - South Asia as a Research Consultant in 2016. She has five years of experience in writing and editing by working as a print journalist for The Economic Times, The Indian Express, and the Lonely Planet Magazine, India.

Kruttika has travelled extensively around India and the world as a travel writer, and reviewed a diverse array of museums and galleries in her travelogues. This sparked her interest in cultural institutions and gave her valuable insights into how these institutions are conceptualised and experienced.

She is currently researching and developing content for the Statue of Unity museum project in Gujarat. This coincides well with her personal interest in Indian history, politics and conflict studies. She is interested in multidisciplinary projects where she can fully utilise her storytelling skills to build multimedia narratives for a variety of audiences.

Kruttika holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in Economics, a Postgraduate Diploma in Journalism and a Master of Arts degree in English Literature, as well as a Woman Grandmaster title from her former career as a professional chess player.

Kruttika reads voraciously and applies her journalistic tools of objectivity and economy to everything she writes.
